

Outdoor Proprioceptive Activities

Proprioceptive activities are “heavy work” or “deep pressure” activities on joints and muscles. These activities can be calming for individuals who are overwhelmed by sensory input from the environment, or they can be alerting for individuals who need increased sensory input to increase attention and engagement. Here are some seasonal proprioceptive activities you can do in the Children’s Garden!

Rolling snow to make a big snowball

Rolling in the snow

Making a snow fort

Hugging a tree

Making a snow angel

Going down slides
